- 5 recessed areas around the hull, mechanical elements, and pipes have been treated with dark brown wash.
- 7 to enhance the chipping, I decided to add some rust. For this I used thinned Streaking Rust Effect applied over the biggest scratches.
- 8 After letting the effect dry for a few minutes, it was blended using fine brush moistened in thinner.
- 9 Next, some rust streaks are applied. This effect would occur during a stopover on some planet with atmosphere, so the effect must flow downwards from the effects of gravity just like here on Earth. Approximate shape and outline of future streaks were painted with small brush.
- 10 After 5-10 minutes they were blended mostly with vertical movements, so that they no longer look unnatural.
- 11 Streaks from some features were created in the same way, this time the effect is applied in the direction that they would occur when the star ship is in flight. Using a different colour will add variety and realism to the effect.

12 Some general dirt from the sides was done with Engine Grease. It was brushed on low pressure (SICA 0.5bar).

13 Almost immediately, the effect was blended with a sliding motion using a cotton ball moistened in thinner.

14 The landing gear is a critical feature that should not be overlooked. I have applied all paint in earth colours to the places where dust would accumulate during landing manoeuvres.

15 The effect was blended with a fat brush moistened in thinner using a sliding motion.
